Three Others Aboard Vessel Overturned in Hempstead Bay Saved as They Cling

of the launch and the other was rising as the stern had reared an instant before.

The Shellrus rolled completely over. Kiernan, Duthie and Traver were the only ones who emerged from the smother, so far as they could see. They scrambled up the slippery, almost-submerged bottom of the launch and clung to the keel like limpets, pounded by waves until their bodies were black and blue and wrenched this way and that until it seemed their arms must be torn off.

Traver pulled off his shirt and waved it frantically with one hand as he caught sight of another boat coming up the inlet. It was the Rosa Belle, in which Captain George Wilson was bringing the Lynbrook Masonic Club back from an outing.

The signal was sighted and the Rosa Belle stood by until the three ship-wrecked fishermen caught lines that were thrown to them and were hauled aboard. Kiernan and Duthie were able to go home. Traver was suffering from exhaustion and remained at a house in Far Rockaway near the water front.

than is Bowser the Hound when he is hunting Reddy Fox. Hunting is a sort of game to Bowser. He enjoys it in the same way that you enjoy a game of hide-and-seek. Probably you like to do the hiding and let some one else do the seeking. But Bowser likes to do the seeking. But Bowser likes to do the seeking. When at last he found Reddy's trail leading away from the railroad furack he started to follow it, baying joyously. It was easy to follow, and Bowser was once more filled with the excitement of the chase. He had no trouble following that trail until he came to a place just within the edge of the Green Forest. There the trail became all mixed up: Patiently, carefully Bowser tried to work it out with that wonderful nose of his. But each time it suddenly ended at the same place. Over and over again he tried it, and always ended just there. He made a circle around that spot, hoping to pick up the trail. He kept making that circle larger and larger. Nowhere did he find the faintest trace of Reddy Fox. Then he returned to the place where the trail ended.

Just there a tail tree had been blown down in some great storm and the top of it had been caught in another tree so that it leaned against the latter. Bowser looked at it, and then went over to the base of it and sniffed around. He even climbed up on the very foot if it and sniffed. There so that it leaned against the latter. Bowser looked at it, and then went over to the base of it and sniffed around. He even climbed up on the very foot if it and sniffed. There so that it leaned against the latter, Bowser looked at it, and then went over to the base of it and sniffed.

But it was useless. Reddy Fox had wanished quite as if he hadd had. He knew that somehow Reddy had played a clever trick, but what that trick was Bowser couldn't imagine. He did hate to give up. But he knows when he is beaten, and so at last with a little whine of disappointment he turned and trotted toward home.

"That red rascal was too smart for the time," thought Bowser, but some Reddy gave a lit General Weather Conditions

Peters and the Carlton Terrace Yield to Police Liquor Worth $10,000

Ralph A. Day, Federal prohibition director for the State of New York, announced yesterday that he had forwarded circulars to all hotels, restaurants and cabarets, citing the three sections of the Volstead law dealing with the offenses of transporting and possessing liquor. Mr. Day suggests that the owners of these places have cards printed displaying these sections and place them on the tables for the diners to see. He also suggests that the card contain some such warning as the following, which is already in use by several restaurants:

"Please do not ask for intoxicating liquors, as we have none. We earnestly request the co-operation of all our guests in seeing that no liquors are brought into or consumed upon these premises. It is illegal to transport such prohibited beverages, and the management assumes no responsibility for anyone detected doing so."
